The Future is in the Cloud

Fargo, ND - At one point, pagers and fax machines were the wave of the future. Now they're just a distant memory. With an increasing number of businesses utilizing cloud technology, in-house software and IT requirements may soon become a distant memory as well.

DFC Consultants offers customers in the valley the benefits of cloud computing. Through DFC, small and medium sized businesses now have the ability to access Microsoft Dynamics GP and CRM in the cloud.

Cloud technology uses the Internet and central remote servers to maintain data and applications. Through the DFC cloud, customers only pay for what they need, upgrades are automatic and scaling up or down is easy.

"The cloud approach has been vital to companies because they can now afford to deploy complex and costly business applications with a local partner," said Carol Rogne, President of DFC Consultants. "Using DFC's cloud and IT department, small and mid-level businesses can afford to function in the same realm as large companies."

A survey of information technology professionals by Spiceworks in late 2012 found that 62% are using some type of cloud application, up from 48% at the beginning of 2012 and 28% in 2011. Spiceworks is a social network for IT professionals.

The benefits of utilizing DFC's cloud extend past cost savings and simplicity. Through the cloud, businesses can access their software and information anywhere and at any time. Users can work together on projects utilizing the same application without losing their data or mixing it up. Users can also see any updates or changes to projects immediately.

DFC utilizes the highest protection available so information in their cloud isn't susceptible to viruses or malware. Data is ensured and backed up daily with round the clock server monitoring for any intrusion detection.
